Looking At Life From Different Lenses

I had to say good-bye to an old friend recently. As many of you know “change” is hard for me and I had slipped into a very comfortable relationship with my friend. I depended on “him” to give me clear perspective and an unclouded picture of reality. I have relied on “his” help for the last 15 years and walking away was very difficult for me.

I wasn't convinced that I should change my eyeglasses but finally relented to peer pressure and got my eyes examined and new glasses. Adjusting to new lenses took quite a while and I would find myself wearing my old glasses. It took a lot of coaching from my co-workers to get the new lenses fine tuned and then for me to adjust to no line bifocals.

Life viewed with old lenses looks soft, blurry and a bit out of focus. I must confess I don't like the harsh, sharp realities that new glasses force me to see. One of those realities is my support level is still low. I have been able to qualify for dental help at the Free Clinic (which by the way isn't free) and have applied for Food Stamps. Please pray with me that I will be able to find others to join my support team.

I will be spending Thanksgiving with my family in Florida this year. I will also be making a stop in Ormond Beach to visit with friends and supporters from Tomoka Christian Church. I always enjoy spending time with their work team when they come to Equipping The Saints.

Wishing you clear vision as you turn your eyes to Jesus,

John Starke
