Look What Just Blew In !

If you ever watch the Discovery Channel or Myth Busters then you probably recognize the "Dominator". What is the Dominator? It began life as a 2008 Chevy Tahoe. That was before the bulletproof armor made of 16-gauge steel, the Lexan windows strong enough to withstand debris impacting at 90 mph without shattering and a protective sheathing made from something called Rhino Lining. They use it to coat the back of pickup trucks, It's even bomb proof. When the team approaches a tornado, a button is pressed and the car lowers flush to the ground to prevent wind from getting underneath and creating lift. The windshield is double-paned, with the outer glass Lexan, and a triple-wiper system was recently added because the space in between the two windshields was fogging up .The Dominator was built by a Michigan man named Kevin Barton for about $100,000.

This beast was literally in our back yard after the truck hauling it broke down and was towed by our neighbor that runs a towing service. All of us had our picture taken with it (except Kathy who thought it was rather ugly and didn't understand why we were all excited about seeing it up close and personal!)

Those of you that have visited our quiet little community can probably understand why this discovery made my day. Wishing you all a wonderful Thanksgiving filled with blessing. Thank you for blessing me with your prayers and support.
